TENTATIVE SYLLABUS

Course Description and Objectives

This multidimensional, interdisciplinary and integrative course explores how policy makers, including government, legislatures and courts, can and do reach decisions in times of societal-wide stress and uncertainty.

The course will be divided into two components.

The first part of the course looks at Canada and the general theory of decision making. It will be led and taught by Dr. Bryan Schwartz, (doctorate in law, Yale) Asper Chair of International Business and Trade Law at the University of Manitoba. Drawing on insights that have already had an impact on legal thinking including decision theory, behavioral economics and some of the literature on trauma and resilience, it will examine the Canadian and United States legal framework for emergency powers of government and discuss the wider question of how individuals, groups and societies make decisions in times of crises.

The second part explores Israel as a crucible for decision making in times of crises. Featuring a variety of lecturers from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, it will be led by Dr Daniel Ohana, a Canadian-educated jurist now teaching in Israel. It includes introductory classes designed to provide general knowledge of Israeli history and society and the basic concepts and institutional framework of Israeli law and government. It also comprises guest lectures on more specific issues related to decision making in times of crises, including the recent coronavirus outbreak. These lectures will be given by leading academics and experienced practitioners, who will supply students with information on the latest developments in their fields of expertise. It will be seen that Israel, the home of much of the most influential theories of decision-making, has had over the years to address many crises – wars, invasions, terrorism, massive waves of immigration, economic crises, and social divisions. Attention will focus on such questions as: What is the legal, political and social framework for decision-making in such a society? How do democratic institutions continue to function in times of epidemic, military conflict, civil unrest and economic crashes? What has been the role of the Israeli High Court of Justice in moderating by law the tendency of the executive towards rule without parliamentary oversight and judicial checks during times of crises?

Format

The format will be four classes a week for four weeks, starting on Monday, May 3rd, 2021 delivered online (via Zoom). The Canadian classes will be delivered at 6:00 PM CT each day and run for 2 hours, including a break. The classes delivered from Israel will be offered at 9:00 AM CT each day and run for 2 or 3 hours, including a break. All lectures will be available online throughout the program for the students to view when convenient to their schedule. Students will additionally be asked to view recordings of lectures on Israel during the COVID-19 crisis, making 45 hours of total classroom time. Students must attend at least half (8) of the live sessions in real-time.

The course is conducted exclusively in English; proficiency in spoken or written Hebrew is not a prerequisite for participation in the program. Israeli statutes and Supreme Court decisions relevant to the topics taught in class are often available online in English translation.

An online site administered by the International Rothberg School at the Hebrew University will be available to enable easy interaction between students and the academic coordinators throughout the course of the program. By accessing the sites, students will be able to obtain general information and announcements about the course. Background material and course readings will be posted online, so as to give students the opportunity to familiarize themselves in advance with the various topics addressed in the course of the program.

Assessment

Students will receive 3 credit hours from the Hebrew University for the basic course, evaluated by submitting 4 reflection papers on themes of the course, to be chosen by the student at the end of each week. These should be 3-4 pages on one of the topics (student's choice) covered in the lectures in the previous week of the program. The reflections should show that the assigned materials have been read, with the students' thoughts on its value, their agreements or disagreements, and application to legal matters of interest to them or their own experience and observations.

Students who wish to receive an additional 3 credit hours can register for a second course at the Rothberg International School of the Hebrew University, which involves writing a more substantial research paper (7500 words) on a topic selected by the student in agreement with the instructor related to the course's main themes. The research paper must demonstrate a suitably high level of complexity and depth. Evaluation of the paper will be based on the following criteria: thoroughness of research and scholarly nature of sources; presentation and organization (including references and a bibliography); quality and style of writing; and the strength of the presented argument, including demonstrated comprehension of pertinent materials, clarity of reasoning, and originality of the ideas developed in the paper.
