

SAGIT BUTBUL

Holds a BA in Arabic Language and Literature and Middle Eastern Studies (1995) and an MA magna cum laude (2002) in Arabic Language and Literature, all from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Currently writing her PhD theses under the supervision of Prof. Simon Hopkins, under whose supervision she also wrote her MA theses.

Both theses deal with Judaeo-Arabic in general and in Judaeo-Arabic Biblical translations and commentary in particular.

Butbul's research fields are Arabic grammar, lexicology and philology, Classical, Modern and Colloquial Arabic linguistics, as well as Middle Arabic and especially Judaeo-Arabic, including grammar, lexicology and literature – mainly early translations, glossaries and commentaries, particularly those of Karaite origin. These research fields also include knowledge of reading and editing mediaeval manuscripts.